

2022 | RWAV's Victorian Rural Health Workforce Census

Calling all rural and regional health professionals, including GPs, nurses, allied health professionals, or allied health assistants, to the 2022 Victorian Rural Health Workforce (RHW) Census! Have your say on rural Victorian health workforce issues and solutions.

We're asking for your assistance to put together a snapshot of the health workforce and patient needs in your community through the Victorian RHW Census to continue supporting the rural health workforce and communities across regional Victoria.

Who is RWAV?

Rural Workforce Agency Victoria (RWAV) specialises in the recruitment and retention of health professionals for all of country Victoria and all Victorian indigenous areas. Our programs and services support rural General Practitioners (GPs), GP locums, nurses, allied health professionals, medical specialists and students.

Funding from the Victorian Department of Health and the Commonwealth Department of Health enables us to administer programs and support a sustainable rural health workforce.

What is the RHW Census?

Each year, RWAV undertakes an annual Victorian RHW Census to identify the critical access, retention, professional development and advocacy needs of health professionals across all of country Victoria. In addition to all rural health professionals, this year, we are also seeking valuable feedback from the wider community.

How will your results be used?

By understanding the most important issues and drivers in your community that impact how patients access primary healthcare services, we will be able to develop strategies to:

- Direct resources to support priority rural locations with rural health workforce support programs
- Inform advocacy initiatives based on health workforce and patient/community needs
- Identify priority areas for grants and other RWAV services
