

Quality Care Requires Good Training to Support the Person and the Carer, Wherever They Live.

Equitable Access to Training Across Australia

Ensuring equitable access to training for all those who need knowledge and skills to support someone living with Dementia in home, residential aged care and acute care settings is essential if we are to create and maintain a resilient and skilled health workforce and build dementia friendly communities in regional areas.

A New National Dementia Education Standards

We have developed the National Dementia Education Standards Framework to guide organisations and individuals in developing their training programs and identifying the right training opportunities at all levels for anyone providing care for someone living with Dementia.

Creating Safe Environments and Managing Challenging Behaviours

We will discuss how to create safe environments and manage challenging behaviours, and improve the quality of life of those living with Dementia.

Understanding the Unique Needs of Indigenous Communities

We are working closely with indigenous communities around Australia to develop and deliver culturally appropriate, person-centred, trauma informed training wherever it is needed.

This presentation will provide an update on the rollout of the Framework and our regional and remote training program, which is fully funded by the Commonwealth Government. As the number of people living with Dementia grows, so does the need for a skilled workforce and volunteers and family carers.
